User-Generated Content and Competing Firms' Product Design Young Kwark,2017 Firms employ various techniques to obtain information about consumer taste location and valuation prior to making product design decisions User generated content a hallmark of Web 2 0 technologies is becoming an important source of consumer information for firms The vast variety and volume of user generated content makes firms better informed about consumers precision improving effect Furthermore the common and public nature of user generated content makes firms information about consumers more correlated correlation increasing effect We examine the impact of user generated content in a setting where two competing firms uncertain about consumer location or valuation design and sell horizontally differentiated products We find that user generated content has very different implications for competing firms location decisions and quality decisions When firms choose their location in the consumer taste space and are uncertain about consumer taste we find that user generated content can have a negative or positive overall impact on firms depending on whether the precision improving or the correlation increasing effect dominates Also user generated content may have a positive or negative effect on consumers Only when the correlation increasing effect is moderate a win win scenario for both firms and consumers occurs but the society always benefits from user generated content Stronger consumer preference exacerbates the negative impact and amplifies the positive impact of user generated content in this case In sharp contrast when firms choose product quality and face uncertain consumer valuation of quality they do not benefit from user generated content but consumers may benefit or lose from it When the correlation increasing effect is significant both firms and consumers and therefore the society are hurt by user generated content Stronger consumer preference mitigates the negative impact and amplifies the positive impact of user generated content in this case

User-Generated Content and its Impact On Web-Based Library Services Kay Cahill,2009-03-31 User Generated Content and its Impact on Web Based Library Services examines the impact of user generated content on web based library services It begins with an overview of Web 2 0 tools and technologies and a brief look at the emerging semantic tools of Web 3 0 and their implications for libraries The book investigates the changing role of the end user as both a creator and consumer of web content and what this means for society s perception and understanding of information The author addresses the advantages and challenges of using these tools to bring community expertise and opinion into the library from reinvention of the library website as a community rather than a collection to the issues of moderating user generated content The book also explores the notion of low fidelity authority understanding that by acknowledging the value in content that does not necessarily meet traditional definition of authority it creates the potential to achieve a much greater level of relevance and engagement with users Throughout the book conceptual discussion is illustrated with real world examples and practical suggestions for library practitioners Relatively new and extremely relevant topic with which many libraries and librarians are currently grappling Provides conceptual discussion and practical examples of sound strategies for managing user generated content The book is about rethinking what we do as librarians and surrendering some of our traditional notions of authority and control to the expertise that exists in the community Histories of User-Generated Content Ramon Lobato,Julian Thomas,Dan Hunter,2014 Debates about user generated content UGC often depend on a contrast with its normative opposite the professionally produced content that is supported and sustained by commercial media businesses or public organisations UGC is seen to appear within or in opposition to professional media often as a disruptive creative change making force Our suggestion is to position UGC not in opposition to professional or producer media or in hybridised forms of subjective combination with it the so called pro sumer or pro am system but in relation to different criteria namely the formal and informal elements in media industries In this article we set out a framework for the comparative and historical analysis of UGC systems and their relations with other formal and informal media activity illustrated with examples ranging from games to talkback radio We also consider the policy implications that emerge from a historicised reading of UGC as a recurring dynamic within media industries rather than a manifestation of consumer agency specific to digital cultures Media in third-wave democracies Péter Bajomi-Lázár,2018-05-02

The media and political systems of former communist countries in Central Eastern Europe share a number of similarities with those in Southern Europe According to Karol Jakubowicz these similarities also include late democratisation a weak middle class marked social and economic differences a strong catholicism etc Where are the third wave democracies to date particularly as regards their media systems And where are they heading for This volume with his different talks of a joint conference in 2016 attempts to answer these questions and many more The Tangled Web of UGC Daniel J. Gervais,2015 Even as a mere conceptual cloud the term user generated content is useful to discuss the societal shifts in content creation brought about by the participative Web and perhaps best epitomized by the remix phenomenon This Essay considers the copyright aspects of UGC On the one hand the production of UGC may involve both the right of reproduction and the right of adaptation the right to prepare derivative works On the other hand defenses against claims of infringement of these rights typically rely on transformative fair use or the fact that an insubstantial amount such as a quote of the preexisting work was used One might also rely on another type of fair use defense for example that the second work was used in news reporting or although the case law on this point is still controversial that the reproduction was fair use because it made the work more accessible While it is clear that creating original content by reusing preexisting content is nothing new the focus here is on amateur creation and reuse and the Essay discusses whether the amateur nature of the content constitutes a new normative vector The Essay suggests that the first step to find adequate answers is a proper taxonomy of UGC

User-generated Video on the Web Tim Deal,2007 Web 2.0 Timo Beck,2008-08 The number of Internet users is steadily growing Currently 55% of all Germans go online on a regular basis compared to 28% in 2001 and there is no end in sight to this upward trend Today s young people are growing up with the Internet and the Internet is growing up with them It is evolving the term for what is happening now in cyberspace is Web 2.0 an expression coined at a conference in 2004 by the web business mogul Tim O Reilly to describe a new evolutionary phase of the Internet The phrase is shorthand for the second Internet boom which now follows the one that ended in late 2001 with the biggest destruction of investors capital in history The bursting of the so called dotcom bubble 6 years ago marked a turning point At that time many people concluded that the Internet was over hyped Bubbles and the subsequent shakeouts however appear to be a common feature of all technological revolutions They have always marked the point at which real success stories developed their full scope and showed their strength The defining feature of the current evolutionary phase of the web is that established companies are giving huge amounts of money to start ups which have three things in common they have grown from nowhere with astonishing speed they often have no revenue stream to speak of and most of their content is produced by their users Google paid 1.65bn for the acquisition of Youtube Rupert Murdoch's News Corp bought Myspace for 580m and Holzbrinck fully took over Studivz.net for about 85m to give just a few examples of recent Web 2.0 deals What makes these so called online communities so valuable The answer to this question may be surprising The deployed technologies are more or less the same as 6 years ago but what all these new sites share is a new approach to creating things user generated content in the jargon The Internet is no longer about corporations telling users what to do think or buy it is about the content people create themselves Participation not publishing is the keyword This development is particularly interesting for corporations which have noticed the importance and potential of the do it yourself Web as both a strategic marketing tool and a source of valuable information about consumer preferences and opinions Tomorrow's consumers will no longer be interested in what companies say about their products and services they will rely on opinions of other normal people Chris Anderson chief editor of Wired Magazine states Your brand is what Google says about it Not what you say about it Corporations which have spent huge amounts of money on questionable market research projects in the past can get even better information for free in the future as consumers and interested users exchange experiences and opinions about brands and products in online discussion forums anyway As a result marketing activities and product offers can be customized by gathering processing and analyzing information about consumer preferences it remains to be seen which companies will exploit these new opportunities and which will not Very little is known about the factors that influence the content production Often online communities fail because participation drops to zero and nobody knows why In order to maximize the participation level and thereby the benefits that can be drawn from their contributions it is important to examine what drives people to produce content Therefore this thesis aims to identify the most important factors that influence the level of user generated content production in online communities More specifically a comprehensive conceptual framework of the relevant determinants will be proposed and tested on an empirical basis The results are supposed to serve as a guideline for researchers and community operators in the future
