imagine a battlefield scenario with a single Samurai stands surrounded by multiple opponents A novice s attention would jump from opponent to opponent in an anxious attempt to defend himself Such a strategy soon tires the warrior who will be defeated An expert warrior will spread his attention evenly in all directions but still experience anxiety as he mentally plans his strategy His thought and anxiety may be his downfall if his opponents are truly skilled A master s attention like the expert s is spread evenly but he remains as calm as the surface of a still lake With no predetermined idea of what his actions might be his body takes the right action without a single thought You may wonder how the Samurai s experience bears any resemblance to your modern life After all no armies or assassins seem to be trying to attack you or your town In one way we modern people are not so different from the Samurai With our busy lives we don t have time to spend hours a day in meditation Instead we need a meditation that allows our actions in a high pressure fast paced world to flow from a depth of awareness The Warrior s Meditation helps you access and express from that depth naturally
