Institute,2014-04-29 Citizens expect their governments to lead on sustainability But from largely disappointing international conferences like Rio II to the U S s failure to pass meaningful climate legislation governments progress has been lackluster That s not to say leadership is absent it just often comes from the bottom up rather than the top down Action on climate species loss inequity and other sustainability crises is being driven by local people s women s and grassroots movements around the world often in opposition to the agendas pursued by governments and big corporations These diverse efforts are the subject of the latest volume in the Worldwatch Institute s highly regarded State of the World series The 2014 edition marking the Institute s 40th anniversary examines both barriers to responsible political and economic governance as well as gridlock shattering new ideas The authors analyze a variety of trends and proposals including regional and local climate initiatives the rise of benefit corporations and worker owned firms the need for energy democracy the Internet s impact on sustainability and the importance of eco literacy A consistent thread throughout the book is that informed and engaged citizens are key to better governance The book is a clear eyed yet ultimately optimistic assessment of citizens ability to govern for sustainability By highlighting both obstacles and opportunities State of the World 2014 shows how to effect change within and beyond the halls of government This volume will be especially useful for policymakers environmental nonprofits students of environmental studies sustainability or economics and citizens looking to jumpstart significant change around the world
