"For the Fracture of Good Order," the Catonsville Nine Protest and Legacy ,2011 1968 was a tumultuous year in American history The United States government was in the middle of the Cold War and their involvement in Vietnam reached its highest level to date Meanwhile on the domestic front the country was erupting in turmoil Many American citizens engaged in protest against the government s overseas efforts and took to great lengths to resist the war effort These protestors encompassed people from all walks of life students clergy professors lawyers and politicians One of the strongest groups of this anti war movement was religious By May of 1968 one group of Catholics were so fed up with their lack of success in peaceful protests against the war they decided to engage in an act of disobedience May 17 1968 nine Catholics walked into a Catonsville Selective Service office stole as many files as they could carry and burned them with homemade napalm The public knew them as the Catonsville Nine What ensued was more protest a very public trial much media attention and a lasting legacy The Catonsville Nine s trial was five months later and produced a large amount of protests Their criminal proceedings were very different from most as the nine defendants attempted to appeal to consciousness The action received plenty of media attention and became infested in the public mind with a theatrical play and motion picture This action was a moral demonstration rooted in a Catholic pacifist rationale and their trial and media attention provided the vehicles they needed to spread the word of the failures of the American governmental policies Vogue ,1971-03 The Commonweal ,1971 Ramparts ,1971 Issues for Dec 1970 Apr 1972 include section Hard times Social Policy ,1970
