JAMES HURST

Adapted from Elements of Literature: Third Course Author: Holt, Rinehart and Winston, 2008

It was in the storm of summer, summer was dead but autumn had not yet been born, that the first lot in the bleeding town.<sup>1</sup> The flower garden was crowded with crotches, leaves magenta petals and crimsoned green seeds<sup>2</sup> amid the purple plums. The dove elevated by the chimney still reached them, but the circle next to the elm was waterlogged and rotted back and forth like an empty coffin. The last greened flowers were blossoming, and their small drifted across the cotton field and through empty rooms of our house, speaking softly the names of our dead.

Its strange that all this is still so clear to me, now that summer has long since died and time has had its way. A prodigious stands where the bleeding town stood, just outside the kitchen door, and now it is an arid ring in the air, its song seems to rise up in the house, a solitary dove. The flower garden is gone, the house a gleaming white, and the pale leaves across the yard stands straight and sparse. It is sometimes (like night now), as I sit in the cool, green-draped parlor, the prodigious begins to turn, and time with all its changes in ground away and I remember Doodle.

Doodle was just about the meanest brother a boy every had. Of course, he was off every way like old Miss Loochie, who was in town with Pecosent W. I was, and wrote him a letter every day, but was a nice way, like a someone you meet in your dreams. He was born when I was six and was, from the outset, a disappointment. He seemed all heart, with a very body which was and a shrewd like an old man's. Everybody thought he was going to die every body enough, A and Henry, who had delivered him. If he said he would live because he was born in a shell,<sup>3</sup> and could move under from his' night now. Daddy had Mrs. Heath, the neighbor, had a little mackay-ruffin for him. But he didn't die, and when he was three or four old, Mama and Daddy decided they might as well name him. They named him William Armstrong, which is like trying a big ball on a small time. It was a name made good only as a last name.

I thought myself pretty smart at many things, like holding my breath, running, jumping, or sticking the stick in Old Wanda's nose, and I wanted to see how anything else someone to me to the headland Landing, someone to be with, and someone to go with in the tugboat of the great port behind the bay, where across the fields a red orange you could see the sea. I wanted to be like Mr. Blaine, saying, told me that even if William Armstrong lived, he would never do these things with me. He might not, she added, even be "all there." He might, as long as he lived, be on the other side of the center of the ball in the first hole now where the white mackay-ruffin's machine followed out in the afternoon sea breeze, curling like palm-tree fronds.<sup>4</sup>

It was bad enough having an "uncle" brother, but having one who possibly was not all there was unbearable, and began to make plans to tell him by an offering him with a pillow. However, one afternoon as I watched him, my head poked between the iron parts of the foot of the bed, he looked straight at me and grinned. I slipped through the room, down the ceiling bath, shouting, "Blaine, he called. He's all there! He's all there!" and he was.

Was he was two, if you had him on his stomach, he began to move himself, twisting himself. The doctor said that with his weak heart this strain would probably kill him, but it didn't. Twisting, he'd go himself up, turning first and, then a soft purple, and finally collapse back onto the bed like an old worn-out doll. I was still see Mama watching him, her hand pressed tight across her mouth, her eyes wide and watching. But he had not moved! Or was his third witness, and we brought him out of the first bedroom, putting him on the rug before the fireplace. For the first time he became one of us.

As long as he lay all the time in bed, we called him "William A. Armstrong, even though it was funny and sounded as if we were talking to one of our ancestors, but with his grumpy as good as the doctor's rug and beginning to talk, something had to be done about him now. It was I who named him. When he moved, he crawled backwards, as if he were in reverse and couldn't change gear. If you called him, he'd turn around as if he were going in the other direction, then he'd back right up to you to be pulled up. Crawling backward made him look like a shuffling,<sup>7</sup> and I began to call him Doodle, and in time even Mama and Daddy thought it was a better name than "William A. Armstrong. Only A and Henry disagreed. She said such babies should be treated with a general neglect since they might turn out to be saints. Reasoning my brother was perhaps the kindest thing I ever did for him, because nobody expects such from someone called Doodle.

Although Doodle seemed to crawl, he showed no signs of walking, but he was n't idle. He talked a great deal to me all year listening to what he said. It was about this time that Daddy told him a go-out and I had to pull him around. At first I just pushed him up and down the piazza,<sup>8</sup> but then he started crying to be taken out into the yard, and it ended up by my having to hug him whenever I went. If I was not so pulled up crying, he'd start crying to go with me and Mama would call from where she was, "Take Doodle with you."

He was a brother in many ways. The doctor had said that he might not get too much, but that, too cold, so too kind and that he must always be treated gently. A long lot of days went with him, all of which I ignored since we got out of the house. It's strange he was coming with me. He was with him across the ends of the cotton rows and across his small eyes on two wheels. Sometimes I considerably turned him over, but he never told Mama. He did was very sensitive, and he had to wear a big stone hat whenever he went out. When he was going, get rough and he had to cling to the sides of the gateway, the hat slipped all the way down over his ears. He was a night finally. I could see it was called. Doodle was my brother and he was going to die to me forever, no matter what I did, so I dragged him across the bleeding cotton field to show with him the only way my I have, Old Wanda's nose. I pulled the go-out through the water-tube door, down into the green distance where the palm-tree fronds whirled by the stream. I lifted him out and set him down in the soft rubber grass beside a tall pine. His eyes were round with wonder as he gazed about him, and his little hands began to stroke the rubber grass. Then he began to cry. "For heaven's sake, what's the matter?" I asked, and cried.

nothing and even so. "We'd better be careful with our hands and talk about that headstand, beyond the touch of the everyday world. Then when the cleared eyes of the sea below and orange in the top of the pine, we'd drop our heads into the stream and watch them float away from the sea.

There is within me (and with others I have watched it in others) a kind of cruelty born by the stream of time, such as our blood sometimes has in the need of our destruction, and at times I was mean to Doodle. One day I took him up to the barn loft and showed him his mother, telling him how we all had believed he would die. It was covered with a film of Paris green<sup>9</sup> sprinkled to kill the rats, and even so he had built a comfortable it.

Doodle studied the mackay-ruffin for a long time, then said, "It's not mine."

"It is," I said. "And before I'll help you down from the loft, you're going to have to touch it."

"I won't touch it," he said softly.

"Then I'll leave you here by yourself," I threatened, and made as if I were going down.

Doodle was displeased at being left. "Don't leave me, Brother," he cried, and began toward the rafters. His head, twisting, reached out, and when he touched the rafters, he screamed. A scream and slipped out of the barn into the forest, cowering and cowering as with Paris green. Doodle was shocked, so I got him on my shoulder and carried him down the ladder, and even when we were outside in the bright sunshine, he clung to me, crying, "Don't leave me. Don't leave me."

When Doodle was five years old, I was embarrassed at having a brother of that age who couldn't walk, so I set out to teach him. We went down in Old Wanda's nose and it was spring and the air sweet with all the things being everywhere like a second song. "The going to teach you to walk, Doodle," I said.

He was sitting comfortably on the soft grass, leaning back against the
