environmental effectiveness must be based on capability. The authors suggest that a firm's environmental performance is a function of its size, age, industry, and ownership. ## Initiative and referendum proposal faces opposition the 1980s, the American and British governments have been working together to develop a common approach to the management of the world's fisheries. This has been done through the International Commission for the Conservation of the Atlantic Tunny (ICCAT), which was established in 1979. The Commission's main task is to ensure that the world's stocks of Atlantic tunny are managed in a sustainable way. This involves setting quotas for the number of fish that can be caught, and ensuring that these quotas are not exceeded. The Commission also monitors the health of the fish stocks, and provides advice to governments on how to manage them. In 1985, the Commission agreed a new management plan for the Atlantic tunny, which was designed to ensure that the stocks would be able to sustain a catch of 100,000 tonnes per year. This plan was based on a scientific assessment of the fish stocks, and was designed to be flexible enough to allow for changes in the size of the stocks over time. The Commission's work is funded by the governments of its member states, and it has a secretariat in Washington, D.C. The Commission's efforts have been successful in ensuring that the world's stocks of Atlantic tunny are managed in a sustainable way, and that the fishery is able to provide a source of food and income for millions of people.
