strongest criticism to Cullen's argument is that he is too U.S.-centric. He affects not to consider the fact that there are already countries in the world that have been able to achieve the same results as the U.S. without the aid of the U.S. government. He also fails to mention that the U.S. government has been able to achieve the same results as the U.S. without the aid of the U.S. government. This is a very serious flaw in his argument, as it suggests that the U.S. government is not the only one that can achieve such results. In fact, many other countries have been able to achieve similar results without the aid of the U.S. government. This is a very important point that Cullen fails to mention, and it is one that should be taken into account when evaluating his argument.
